And when her day's work's over,
Around a cheerful fire
She sings or rests contented -
What more can man desire?
Let those who squander millions
Review her happy lot,
They'll find their proud pavillions
Far inferior to her cot.

Between the Po and Parma,
Some Villains seiz'd my Coach;
And dragg'd me to a Cavern
Most dreadful to approach
By which the Maid of Lodi
Came trotting from the fair
She paus'd to hear my wailings
And see me tear my hair.

Then to her market basket
She tied her poney's rein -
I thus by female courage,
Was dragg'd to life again,
She led me to her dwelling
She cheer'd my heart with wine,
And then she deck'd a table,
At which the Gods might dine.

Among the mild Madonnas
Her features you may find
But not the fam'd Correggios
Could ever paint her mind;
Then sing the Maid of Lodi,
Who sweetly sang to me!
And when this Maid is married,
Still happier may she be.
